The Skype is the limit! Sex toy that connects to laptop lets couples hit the big O from a distance (... and it's a novel use for your Nintendo Wii remote)

Put the Rampant Rabbit away - there's a new vibrator in town. The Mojowijo is the very latest in sex toy technology - and it could transform the way that long-distance couples communicate forever.

Billed as the toy that has transformed cybersex, the Mojowijo vibrator can be connected wirelessly to a laptop and controlled remotely, meaning that those forced to say goodnight via Skype could now see their late night calls suddenly spiced up.

The Mojowijo is a sex toy of two parts - one, a traditionally shaped pink vibrator for the ladies, the other, a blue ring-shaped device.

The ultimate long-distance sex toy? The Mojowijo is billed as the latest in cybersex technology

Both attachments are fitted to a handle that can be attached to the accessory port on a Nintendo Wii remote control.

Using the firm's patented Motion2Vibration technology, the device is able to transform the movements performed by each user into vibration signals and send them to another selected device – either in the same room or over the internet.

Couples simply download the appropriate software, dial into each other's laptops using Skype, and the presence of both Mojowijos is picked up.

Mojowijo say their 'body massagers' have been popular with couples forced to spend long periods apart

Using the motion of their own remotes, the users can then play with the settings on their partner's vibrator, upping the frequency or taking it down as required. So the more one partner moves their wand, the more the other partner's will vibrate.

One couple forced to spend six months apart due to work commitments say the Mojowijo has transformed their relationship. Amelia, 33, said: 'My partner has been working in America for the past six months, and we've been communicating by Skype.

'But there is only so long you can keep a spark going in a relationship without physical contact.

'These gadgets have really injected new life into our calls. The brilliant thing is that it is not just purely a masturbatory experience.

'We can control each other's device by moving our own - and it's that element that makes it so good.

'We feel so connected, even though we are on the other side of the world.'

The company is not the first to dip a toe into the world of so-called 'teledildonics', but is probably the most successful to date.

Of their invention, the company says: 'The motions of one device are transformed into vibrations in the other, literally allowing you to share the mojo with anyone, anywhere in the world.'

'Couples in close relationships but separated by distance for long durations have been the most vocal and are looking to Mojowijo to bring intimacy back into their relationships or just keep them going even stronger when distances keep them apart.'

So what exactly is wrong with talking seductively to each other while you each do what you need to? Why do you need a weird gizmo? This is basically phone s*x for the unimaginative... boring... NEXT!

My hubby has only just got the hang of sky+ and texting this article made me laugh so much at the thought of him trying to work it out for himself when his usual go to for IT advise is one of the kids, will have to let this new tech pass us by I'm afraid

I wish this had been around about thirty years ago. Now we have been told that everything, on the internet is going to be recorded for ever, then I'm glad I have nice memories of my conversations long ago.

Very definitely a BAD idea if you think about it. Can you imagine your intimacy with someone floating around the internet and being recorded for ever.

If every word we write on facebook is stored forever, how long before we learn that Skype keeps records too?
